The Thackary Museum

We had the most wonderfully immersive day of learning at the Thackray Medical Museum this week. The children stepped off the bus and were greeted by Florence Nightingale who led us back in time to Scutari Hospital, 1854. The class were captivated by her stories and tried their hand at some of the jobs that nurses and porters had to do - it was very impressive! After lunch we were able to explore the rest of the galleries the museum had to offer: disease street, public health, disease detectives to name just a few! From start to finish the behaviour and enthusiasm of all the Seedlings were outstanding. We were very proud!

1945 in Oak Class

On Wednesday, we welcomed a group of WWII evacuees into Oak Class and turned the clock back to the 17th April 1945. The children arrived to the sounds of the Andrew's Sisters serenading them and spent some time reading authentic newspaper articles from the time.

After learning a little bit about the battle of Britain and watching some British Pathe footage of VE day celebrations in London; we moved on to our WWII food tasting. The children were fantastic trying almost everything we put in front of them—who could have guessed that Spam and liver would be so popular!

We finished the day by watching the film, 'Goodnight Mister Tom,' which we have been studying in English. The children were all completely engrossed and got a real feel for how hard it must have been. As always, their maturity and sensitivity when dealing with difficult subjects made me proud. Well done Oaks.

School Council's Cake Sale

I am sure you all remember the fantastic cake stall which was run by our school council before Easter. They did amazing! Of course we must thank you wonderful parents who made the cakes and then bought them back from us at a highly inflated price.

The school council raised an impressive £147.65 and have voted to spend it on playground equipment.

Outside of School Celebrations

Our children are extremely talented. Here are two of our fantastic pupils - sisters, who after entering their first gymnastics competition both achieved first place!

Wow!

Well done girls, we are very proud of you.
